THE MORAL OF MANASSAS. There is a danger we fear that the southern mind, intoxicated with its exultations over the recent great victory of our arms at Manassan, liant achievement. Certainly there can be no difference of opinion as to its having proved a God-send to the stitutional liberty. It has greatly strengthened the confidence of our people in the ability of their government to maintain itself even at the legions of Hessian soldiery who have been precipitated by the enemy upon our sacred soil. It has impaired the energies of the "old wreck" of the federal government, and has so far ancent acknowledgment of a congressmen, has friends and families. already failed. The population of the eleven States, comprising the Confederate Government, according to the census of 1860, is just 5,581,649. A levy of ten per cent. of this amount, which has always been regarded as not only practicable but extremely light for military purposes, would give us an army of five hundred and fiftyeight thousand men. Leaving out the disaffeeted portions of the country, where recruiting might prove somewhat difficult, we may safely calculate on raising 400,000 men with the greatest facility, for it is estimated, that we have more than 200,000 armed and equipped in the field. The Confederate Government should at once exercise its energies in this work. While we can readily whip the energy may in an open field and fair fight, where they do not contamber us in a proportion greater than three to two, we must not place ourselves, by everything that was dear to them, in such a condition as to render the result the stand uplify. POPULAR INDIGNATION AGAINST FROM THE SEAT OF WAR IN VIR-THE LINCOLN CABINET.

The New York Herald says that Tuesday vening last the Republicans held caucus ectings in various sections of that city, at which the late disaster on the Potomac was discussed, and the most bitter expressions of indignation uttered against the cabinet for ermitting the army to fall into the "rebel ap" at Managers Junction. A change of e cabinet was also freely discussed, and the as yet we talk of nothing else here, I have heard rogramme for a new cabinet:

The crazy old fanatic, Stephen H. Tyng, of New York, not long ago made an address in that city, in which he asked if any one believed there were five hundred bibles in the whole southern army, and declared that the uspired record would blister the sacrilegious hands of any rebel soldier who should take it up. The incident I have parrated is a sufficient ommentary on this most audacious and unchristian figure of speech. You will be shocked to know that the magnan mous and heroic Gen. McDowell has up to this time left his dead unburied, and his wounded to take care of themselves on the heid of Manassas, where they fought with a coarage worthy of a better cause. The only reason that can be assigned to so barbarous a reject, is that he has been utterly overwhelmd by the defeat, and is unequal to the performance of the plainest duties that devolve on a commander.
